When considering intimacy, the first thing that comes to your mind might be sex.

However, intimacy in a relationship isn't just about physical closeness; it's about the daily moments that build a deep emotional connection.

Intimacy is very personal. It's what it means to you.

Quite simply, it's that sense of closeness and connection that you feel with another person, and it's unique to you in a relationship.

We can often find that in our relationships, they can go dry, feel a bit boring, monotonous, like going round the hamster wheel.

You get accustomed to doing the same thing over and over again, so that there's no flavour, no spice or excitement.

When you can find ways to boost intimacy, that level of closeness and understanding of your partner at a deeper level can be such a game-changer, and it doesn't even have to centre around sex.

The following 12 powerful questions will help you to increase and amplify intimacy in your relationship.

The significance of coming from a place of curiosity and playfulness in a relationship is underestimated. We tend to lose a lot of that along the way - that sense of fun, and that's what can boost intimacy.

So, these are questions that are going to make your relationship fiery, spicy, and nourishing.

If you're single and thinking how this applies to you, well, this is a great manifestation tool.

Answer the questions as if you were just imagining and supposing that you were in a relationship right now.

Answer as you would respond to a partner. Also, play around with it—How would you like your ideal partner to respond? This will set a framework for you for when you are in your desired relationship.

Whether you're single or coupled up, the questions will also help you to know yourself better too!

The important thing is to listen to these responses with no judgements and no criticism. This is your partner's views, their feelings, their perceptions, and their experiences, so allow them to share.

It's also an opportunity to explore the questions more deeply. Be curious and ask your partner when they respond: "What makes that important to you?", "How does that make you feel?"

Really sit back and empathise, deeply listen, be fully attentive, be fully present with your partner when they're answering these questions.

I've now got another BONUS powerful technique for you that can transform your relationship by enhancing intimacy with this one habit!

It's a simple yet impactful exercise involving 5 key elements, that I've coined the 'L-RUGI' technique - It's an acronym that you'll want to remember!

L = Love R = Respect U = Uplift G = Gratitude I = Inspire

But here's the kicker — this isn't a one-time deal. It's a daily practice, ideally, when you're physically together or connecting through a phone or video call. We're talking about daily verbal or video expressions.

Why? Because communication is so much more than the words we say or write. It's about the tone, the emotion, and the connection that comes from sharing these sentiments when you can look into each other's eyes.

However, if you find yourself unable to express face to face verbally, a written message can still be incredibly beneficial.

Here's the 'L-RUGI' technique:

Love

The expression of love goes beyond the usual 'I love you.' It's about expressing the deep emotions and connections you share with your partner.

What is it about them that makes your heart swell with affection? It could be the way they make you laugh during tough times, their unwavering support in your endeavours, or the comforting feeling of being truly understood.

Love, in its purest form, is an acknowledgment of the unique and beautiful qualities that make your partner an irreplaceable part of your life.

Respect

Respect is vital in any relationship. This is about acknowledging and appreciating your partner for who they are, recognising their individuality, their choices, and boundaries.

What specific qualities, actions, or characteristics evoke admiration and esteem? What aspects of your partner that you find honourable and valuable?

This recognition can encompass a wide range of attributes, from their personal values and strengths to the way they handle challenges or contribute positively to the relationship.

When respect becomes a daily practice, it builds a foundation of trust and appreciation that allows your relationship to thrive.

Uplift

Feeling uplifted is not just about feeling good; it's about recognising the ways in which your partner lifts you up—emotionally, mentally, or even spiritually.

How does your partner contribute to your personal growth and happiness?

It might be the encouragement they offer during challenging moments, the support they provide for your goals, or the positive influence they have on your mindset.

When you feel uplifted by your partner, it creates a dynamic where both individuals can flourish and bring out the best in each other.

Gratitude

It's easy to take things for granted, but this is about expressing gratitude for specific actions, qualities, or even the simple moments that make your relationship special.

What are you genuinely grateful for in your partner? It could be the way they make your favourite meal when you've had a tough day, their ability to bring a sense of calm to a chaotic situation, or the small gestures that show they are thinking of you.

Gratitude transforms routine moments into cherished memories, fostering a deeper sense of connection.

Inspire

What do you find inspiring about your partner? It might be their passion for their pursuits, the resilience they show in the face of challenges, or the way they embrace life with enthusiasm.

Sharing this can deepen your connection. It adds a layer of excitement and shared purpose to your relationship, making the journey together even more fulfilling.

To supercharge the L-RUGI technique even more, stating the “why” for each thing you love, respect, find uplifting, are grateful for and inspired will amplify the quality of that share. The power of “because” can add depth and meaning.

Remember, this exercise is a daily practice that fosters communication, vulnerability, and intimacy in your relationship. It's about going beyond the surface and truly understanding and appreciating your partner. The key is to make it a daily ritual!

Voila!

Intimacy is a dynamic force that can transform your relationship. The 12 questions and the L-RUGI technique serve as practical tools to nurture the emotional connection, creating a relationship that is not only fulfilling but also resilient.

Remember, the key is consistency - making these practices a ritual to deepen your understanding and appreciation for each other.
